

Abstract

A method for monitoring a network containing routers using a backup routing protocol and organized in at least one backup router group, includes discovering a topology object model of the routers, detecting a condition of the at least one backup router group based on at least one threshold value, and displaying an indication of the detected condition. A machine readable medium can include software or a computer program or programs for causing a computing device to perform the method.